7. DO YOU WANT TO BE AN INTERIOR DESIGNER? One question you first need to ask yourself is, do I know the difference between an interior designer and an interior decorator? An interior designer designs and supervises the construction of building interiors, so, among other things, they need an understanding of building construction. To work in this field you would usually have at least a diploma such as the Diploma of Interior Decoration and Design, offered at several TAFE Institutes, however, many interior designers have a university degree such as Interior Architecture from Monash or Interior Design from RMIT or Swinburne. Interior decorators, on the other hand, plan and implement decoration of homes, offices and so on (eg colour schemes, lighting, furniture) and would often complete the Diploma of Interior Decoration and Design. Most courses require applicants to attend an interview and folio presentation as part of the application process at the end of Year 12 (all except Interior Design at Swinburne Uni which selects on ATAR). Thus, prospective applicants need to attend Open Days to find out more about the course for which they are applying, and to help them decide at which institution they prefer to study. It is important to be able to explain at an interview why you prefer a particular institution – difficult to say if you haven’t been there!

- Students interested in design might also consider studying architecture, industrial design, communication or graphic design, building design (architectural), product design, fashion design, furniture design or visual merchandising.
